The News and the Politics. Of course the topic of general conversation in pri vate circles, and of discussion or speculation in the public press is, the state of affairs in the East of Europe-the chances of peace on war between Russia and Turkey, and if war, its probable results. As far as Russia and Turkey, single-handed, are concerned, there could be little or no doubt as to how the struggle must eventuate. The former wars waged between these two powers, at least within the last century, have shown too plainly the overwhelming preponderance of Russia; and the lapse of time since the last peace in 1829 has only served to insources and perfecting the military organization of and Lord Redeliffe objecting. Russia, which it has allowed Turkey to sink one step lower in the downward course upon which her declining system has long since entered. But the real question is with respect to the policy which their several views of interest or perhaps of duty may induce the other powers of Europe, but especially England and France to adopt, and how far these powers may become involved in the quarrel. and how far its results may be modified by their intervention. It is generally taken for granted, and we believe correctly, that Austria, the Emperor of which has sunk to the position of the first vassal of Russia, will eventually take the part of that power in any struggle which may ensue. The Queen of Prussia is sister to the Emperor of Russia-the Prince of Prussia, the heir to the Crown, is his nephew; is it probable that Prussia will co-operate in good faith with the allies in carrying out the treaty stipulations, which guarantee the integrity gestion as he has done with more deference and and independence of the Turkish Empire? It is not respect .- Greensboro' Patriot to be doubted that the Emperor of Russia knew Some persons have supposed, as Mr. Colby was make good his positions only as against England and France.
